If you are a member of the military and away from your usual duty station, you may place an "active duty alert" on your credit report to help minimize the risk of identity theft while you are deployed. When a business sees the alert on your credit report, it must verify your identity before issuing you credit. The business may try to contact you directly, but if you are on deployment, that may be impossible. As a result, the law allows you to use a personal representative to place or remove an alert. Active duty alerts on your report are effective for one year, unless you request that the alert be removed sooner. If your deployment lasts longer, you may place another alert on your report.

I understand that this active duty alert will expire in 365 days unless I make a written request for the alert to be removed sooner.

I also understand that as long as this active duty alert is in my credit file, no new credit will be approved or issued unless the lender has first been able to verify my identity.
